

English and multilingualism in South African society

Papers from the English National Language Body of PanSALB

2 February 2007

Introduction

The English Academy of Southern Africa has made its website available for the publication of this document so that it may be more widely known and debated. The Academy does not take responsibility for its contents.

The document is the work of the English National Language Body. The Pan South African Language Board, a statutory body in terms of the language clauses at the beginning of the South African Constitution, has a national language body for each of the eleven official languages as part of its structures.

The document was submitted to the PanSALB Board early in 2007 with a request that it should be published. An internal workshop was held at the beginning of 2008, at which strong reservations were expressed by members of other national language bodies. Publication by PanSALB, including criticism that has been expressed, may still occur. This is the situation in January, 2009.
